Programm/Gliederung

In this advanced seminar, we cover current issues of global economic governance with a focus on financial regulation. Global economic governance encompasses a wide range of actors, rule-making institutions for managing global trade and finance. Over the semester, we delve deeper below the headlines of mainstream news media and investigate the causal factors determining intergovernmental and transnational cooperation, employing the theoretical toolkits of International Political Economy (IPE). In addition to a review of the major theoretical traditions of IPE (market power approaches, historical institutionalism, liberal theory or societal-based approaches and economic constructivism), students will undertake their own research in analyzing the interplay of interests, ideas and institutions in informing the preferences of key players over financial regulation, namely the diverse membership of G20 countries, and their interactions across and within the multiple sites of global governance, for instance, the Financial Stability Board (FSB), the Bretton Woods Institutions, and the new European Union institutions for financial supervision.
